Today Translations: At the intersect of language services and data security

Financial, legal and governmental organisations with international operations identify external translation and interpreting services as a weak link within their data and security supply chain. Mismanagement in the provision of language services and distribution of sensitive information can lead to fraud, as well as commercial and reputational damage.

Today Translations, with its specialist division Today Advisory, has introduced a series of trailblazing security systems and processes that have seen it become the first specialised language service provider with ISO27001 accreditation, the internationally recognised standard for information and cyber security management systems.

In accordance with this certification, Today Translations has developed a range of additional services next to its commercial translation and interpreting services, designed to identify and manage potential risk, and protect vulnerable assets when handling sensitive foreign language documents.

AMLiss advisory services

Recent anti-money laundering and customer due diligence directives introduced in the United Kingdom by the Financial Conduct Authority and the Solicitor's Regulation Authority means that increasing scrutiny to identify, assess and mitigate suspicious activity and illegal financing. Such pressures become altogether more challenging when dealing with source material in a language other than English.

AMLiss is a specialised service that assesses suspected fraud, forgery or misinformation within foreign language documents. Developed by Today Translations and Today Advisory in cooperation with experts in linguistics and economic crime investigation, AMLiss is divided into three separate tiers of multilingual assurance in a streamlined and cost-effective manner:

- Review and identification of key information

Key information within the document is extracted, translated and cross referenced by the linguist. The translation of these key facts is then certified and given a unique reference number, necessary in the event of an audit or evidential processes.

- Content verification

Financial and legal institutions carry a legal obligation to know their customer. However, sometimes criminals succeed in hiding the illegal source of their wealth using forged documentation. Today Translations and its network of linguists and regional and sectoral experts employ their expertise and analytical skills to highlight factual irregularities within documents or verbal communications that may indicate suspicious activity.

- Multilingual risk management training

AMLiss professionals, partners and clients need to learn of the risks associated with assessing multilingual documentation. These include highlighting the specific risks associated with different multilingual documentation, outlining good and bad diligent practices, and identifying criminal typographies prevalent in document forgery.

Today Translations also provides tailored training courses in cultural awareness, as well as continuous professional development (CPD) accredited courses in partnership with the Centre for Investigative Learning.

It has become a legal obligation to know your customer. This tried and tested approach is the most comprehensive and consultative approach to help professional organisations identify and tackle the risks associated with multilingual documentation.

Secure document handling and supply chain management

With a network of specialised linguists and advisors, Today Translations has established itself as a partner of choice for professional firms dealing with multilingual documentation concerning mergers & acquisitions, due diligence and e-discovery, among other disciplines.
